GROUCHO SAYS:

There was a boy named Jack Who saved up some dough, that's a fact.
He was after a car, wherever it whar,
But he was set, folks, to get the "Best Deal."

He fell for the fad
And read all the ads
"See Tom—See Dick—See Harry"
So to each he went
And to each he lent
His ear while they told him their story.

Then to each he said, "No,"
"But I have the dough, And I still want more for my trade-in."

'Til at last he met "Spider," Whose grin was more wider (But in the trade he was known as a crook)

There Jack met his match
He got what he asked,
And he also got slugged with "the book."

So Jack, the "Big Wheel" made his best deal Just as slick and neat as a tick,
But now he's more sadder and a whole lot wiser.
(About Spider? His grin's even wider).

Now Jack's sister, named Jill,
Was a cute little frill, But too smart to be dumb, like her brother.

When she wanted a car, she didn't go far,
Just down to her local dealer

She was met with a smile, and after awhile
She saw the exact car that she wanted.
Then they got down to figures, straight forward and honest, So Jill said, "That's it. Let's get started."

Now she owns that new beauty
And it cost her less booty Than Jack, the "Wheel" (who made the big deal).

Now we know this rhyme smells
But morals are swell (Provided, of course, you will use them)

So pay heed, lest you feel That you, too, are a "Wheel"
Who is smarter and wiser than "Spider."
